Aims of Group

Holcombe Moor Heritage Group is a group of volunteers with an interest in discovering the history of the Holcombe Moor area.

The main purpose of the group is to unlock the secrets hidden in the Holcombe Valley and Moor and to create a picture of what it was like to live in the valley hundreds of years ago, by investigating its history, people and archaeology with the guidance of archaeologists, archivists and other experts.

Many projects are undertaken including collecting old photos and recording memories of the older generation who lived in the area. Communication is through our website, social media, talks and exhibitions. All are aimed at increasing both our own and other people's understanding and enjoyment of the history and heritage of Holcombe Moor and the surrounding area.

The area is a most important historic landscape with 76 sites identified as being of archaeological significance. Dating back to the Stone Age, it was a royal forest, then becoming a moorland farming area where domestic handloom weaving, iron smelting, stone quarrying and coal mining took place. It was at the forefront of the industrial revolution when steam powered the first textile mills. Now it is an army training area, but as such all the landscape, field boundaries and ruined farmsteads are still here, yet out of bounds to the general public until our group was formed.

Comprehensive records of the activities of the group are archived using archival quality paper and inks and deposited with Chethams. A catalogue of all records is kept.
